PRESENTATION

1. Food Access and Placemaking Project Charette
Planning Interns from Rincon Consultants presented a PowerPoint to the Commission describing the vision and goals to promote environmental justice in the City of Huntington Park by using a community garden program to improve public health and economic development.

PUBLIC COMMENT & QUESTIONS

Commissioner Fabian asked interns how this project affects their careers and how doing a project like this helps them in formulating future planning for a job setting.

One of the interns said that they got to engage with the community and listened to people's opinions and concerns to try to encompass an overall proposal of recommendation.

Commissioner Baltazar asked how long it took for the intern's team for this process. The intern said it took about two weeks to complete this project. Commissioner Baltazar said that it's fortunate that the City can have people who take the time to offer beneficial projects for the community.

Community Development Director Forster gave the Commission some of the background on the Environmental Justice Element in the General Plan. Some of the findings were food deserts, shade, and lack of open space. Director Forster said that the presented project will help with many of these issues and will lead to more open space opportunities throughout the City.
